INTRODUCTION

In 1978 the Centre for Human Settlements published Human Settlement Issues in British Columbia 1968 - 1978: A Selected Bibliography in its Occasional Papers series. This bibliography, carefully structured under selected headings proved useful for researchers and students concerned with British Columbia settlement themes.

Five years later the Centre has updated this bibliography and extended its coverage to include appropriate references for all Western Canadian provinces as well as the Yukon and Northwest Territories. Particular emphasis has been placed on readily obtainable publications of regional, national and international importance. The publication was developed and produced by Richard White with the continuing advice of Dr. Knute Buttedahl.

Listings and annotations reflect growing interest in the Western Canadian settlement system as a whole and focus on the bibliographic material available in the region's universities, schools and public agencies. Special emphasis was placed on material which, while available, has not been sufficiently publicized to ensure its widest use in Western Canada. Headings and categories have been selected in consultation with professional librarians of the U.B.C. library and reflect currently used categories of information. It is the Centre's intent to review and keep up to date this regional bibliography periodically. Many individuals assisted in the preparation of the publication. In particular Melva Dwyer, U.B.C. Fine Arts Librarian, Peggy McBride, U.B.C. Planning Librarian, Frances Christoferson, Librarian, G.V. R.D. Planning Department, and the following graduate students in the U.B.C. School of Community and Regional Planning: Steve Pomeroy, John Olynyk, Sandra James, and Derek Murphy.

The bibliography owes its coverage and success to the energy and persistence of Richard White and the continuing good counsel of Dr. Knute Buttedahl. It is hoped that this publication and those that will follow will assist students and professionals in Western Canada to continue to use the growing settlement literature and contribute to it so as to improve our understanding of settlement issues and solve them creatively.

Arable Land: The Appropriate Use Of A Scarce Resource. Proceedings of an Invitational Seminar, Centre for Human Settlements. University of British Columbia. Vancouver, 1978.

An interdisciplinary examination, focussed on the tug-of-war between agricultural and urban uses of land in a Canadian context with particular emphasis on the situation in British Columbia. Includes papers by: Dr. D.W. Hoffman, on Preservation of Arable Land: Problems and Policy Responses in Ontario; Dr. D.A. Rennie on The Drop in Soil Productivity: Who Will Pay the Price?; and Mr. G. Runka of the British Columbia Land Commission.

Beattie, K.G.; Bond, W.K.; and Manning, E.W. The Agricultural Use of Marginal Lands: A Review and Bibliography. En 73-4/13E. Ottawa: Lands Directorate Office, 1981.

This paper contains a review of the Canadian literature on marginal agricultural lands, their definition, location and use. The paper examines Canadian writings on the physical, economic and social causes of the marginal condition and looks at the consequences both locally and nationally of the existence of agriculture at the margins. An extensive annotated bibliography of Canadian analytic works and case studies is included.

Manning, E.W., and Eddy, S.S. The Agricultural Land Reserves of British Columbia: An Impact Analysis. Ottawa: Lands Directorate Office, 1978.

This study documents the impact of the British Columbia Agricultural Land Reserves legislation on land use and landholders in the province. It is based on interviews with 800 landowners randomly selected from 12 areas in British Columbia and reveals that 80% of them supported in principle the preservation of the province's agricultural land. Although there were some complaints from landowners about the way the legislation affected their own property, it has achieved its goal of preserving the limited amount of agricultural land in the province for present and future food production.

New Life From Old Neighbourhoods: The Planning, Design and Re-Use of Buildings, Streets and Services at the Urban Core. Proceedings of an Invitational Seminar. Vancouver: University of British Columbia, Centre for Human Settlements, 1981.

Discusses opportunities and progress in the planning, design and re-use of buildings and their related neighbourhoods. Mr. Freschi, as a practicing architect, is actively involved in recycling old buildings, while Dr. McAfee, as a Housing Planner is concerned with the social consequences of upgrading and re-using downtown buildings; Professor Spence-Sales contributes a personal case-history of re-using a commercial building for office and residential purposes. An extensive discussion focusses on the issues of rehabilitation, conservation, and recycling; do they require a new design profession, a more flexible administration and a still more courageous investor?
